LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

We do not feature a letters section. We feel it is high time to drop the pretense of looking as though we respect the thoughts of the grunting gaggle of inarticulate orangutans which call themselves 'the public'. It's also high time other newspaper editors came clean too.

Preacher Pops!

Rev. Franz Lueger from Austria was a real fire-and-brimstone evangelist, especially when he got to his last sermon. Lueger was warning his flock about the dangers of hell when he suddenly exploded. Wide-eyed parishioners trembled as his body went up in flames, leaving a pile of ashes. Eyewitness reports told of how nobody else in the church was touched by the mysterious explosion, and that the Bible the preacher was holding at the time was not harmed. Authorities are still unable to explain the cause of the explosion. (Weekly World News)

Censoring the Messenger

In November 1985, the South African government began censoring the international press. According to Harper's magazine, in the month before the censorship, the ABC evening news showed an average of 10.8 minutes of coverage from South Africa every night. In the month following the ban, ABC news coverage dropped to 3.2 minutes a night.

■ Ara attitudea evolving?

Despite courses in biology and anthropology, many American college students don't believe in evolution. That's according to a survey published by Current Anthropology.

During the study, more than 2,100 college students from 40 campuses answered a 72-question survey about attitudes on evolution.

Among the survey findings:

- Some 38 percent of the students believed that human life originated in the Garden of Eden.

- 10 percent believed evolution has a goal and is directed by God.

- In the Southwest, where creationism is more likely to be emphasized, 52 percent believed in the biblical account of creation, compared with only 15 percent in the East. Some 49 percent of the students from rural areas believed that fossils came from animals that died during the "flood" described in the biblical story of Noah. Forty-one percent of urban students shared that belief.

- 45 percent believed some races of humans are more evolved than others.

Still, the students appeared more convinced of evolution than the general public. A 1982 Gallup Poll showed 44 percent believed God created things pretty much the way they are about 10,000 years ago; 38 percent believed God guides evolution. Only 9 percent believed man evolved over millions of years and that God had no part in the process. The rest said they didn't know.

Others in Bush ethnic coalition may have ties to fascist groups

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Jerome A. Brentar, the Cleveland travel agent who was dismissed Thursday as co-chairman of a volunteer ethnic coalition in George Bush's presidential campaign, is one of several volunteers in the Bush campaign who may be connected with anti-Semitic or fascist organizations.

Brentar said in an interview Friday that he had helped hundreds of Nazis to immigrate to the United States after World War II. As a postwar officer in the International Refugee Organization working in refugee camps in Schweinfurt and Hanau, Germany, Brentar said, he "helped everyone who applied."

Brentar's removal from the Bush campaign, after allegations of his anti-Semitic activity appeared in a Washington Jewish newspaper, also has called attention to other volunteer leaders of the Bush campaign.

They include:

- The national chairman of Romanians for Bush, Florian Galdau. Galdau was a close associate and defender of Archbishop Valerian Trifa, who was accused by the Justice Department of inciting pogroms by the pro-Nazi Romanian Iron Guard in January 1941 in Bucharest.
- The national co-chairman of Bulgarians for Bush, Radi Slavoff. Slavoff heads the Bulgarian National Front, formed by members of the Nazi-aligned Bulgarian Legion after the war.
- The national vice chairman of Italian-Americans for Bush, Phillip Guarino. He is an honorary American member of P-2 Lodge, a group outlawed in Italy since it plotted throughout the 1970s to overthrow the Italian government and install a dictatorship.
- Bohdan Fedorak, national ethnic vice chairman of Ukrainians for Bush. He is head of external affairs in the United States for the Organization of Ukrainian Nationalists/Bandera, said by historians to be a Nazi-collaborationist organization linked to anti-Polish and anti-Jewish wartime pogroms.
